TV tonight: a touching film about a glamorous funeral director

The Fabulous Funeral Parlour

10pm, Channel 4

Glamorous Hayley is an unlikely funeral director. But she is a wonderful one, as this touching film about her work in a Liverpool parlour shows. Her team also boasts Tom the embalmer: "If you were going out to your last party, you'd want to look your absolute best." Their next client is Marion, a fortysomething who has been given weeks to live, so has decided to plan her own funeral – complete with a vape and a packet of Hubba Bubba in her coffin. Hollie Richardson

Can You Keep a Secret?

9pm, BBC One

It's the penultimate episode of Dawn French's insurance-scam sitcom and Debbie is convinced that Pamela Anderson (the family friend, not the star) is the blackmailer. There's another obstacle, too: William's medication is running out, which leads Debbie to make an ever so slightly problematic appointment with a GP, claiming to have Parkinson's. HR

Reform: Ready to Rule?

9pm, BBC Two

As Nigel Farage continues "stuffing his party full of failed Tories", as Labour puts it, Laura Kuenssberg examines the history of Reform UK and considers its future – from the party's fringe beginnings to now consistently leading in the polls. She speaks to members and discusses how it is reshaping the political landscape. HR

Michael Jackson: The Trial

9pm, Channel 4

The Michael Jackson industry grinds gloomily on, finding new angles through which to explore the child abuse allegations against the singer. This series uses previously unreleased footage and audio to examine Jackson's relationship with the teenager Gavin Arvizo and his problematic dealings with the journalist Martin Bashir. Phil Harrison

Surgeons: A Matter of Life or Death

9pm, Channel 5

Another visit to University Hospitals Birmingham for an unflinching look at vital procedures. A congenital disorder means 17-year-old Leo urgently needs a new liver. Elsewhere, 47-year-old Daniel prepares for a time-pressured surgery involving both a kidney removal and a heart bypass. Graeme Virtue

Black Ops

9.30pm, BBC One

Series two of the comic thriller starring Gbemisola Ikumelo and Hammed Animashaun has been a wild ride so far, and the penultimate episode only ratchets up the laughs and the tension. With Dom and Kay fired from MI5, the chances of halting Steve's plot before Notting Hill carnival are looking worryingly slim. Hannah J Davies
