Todd Blanche Indicts Former SPLC Woman For Defrauding Nazis Or Something

Donald Trump's favorite ball-lapping pomeranian Todd Blanche isn't wasting any time now that the Senate has confirmed him as Trump's personal lawyerattorney general Trump's ball-lapping pomeranian.

Yesterday, Blanche and the Middle District of Alabama dropped a superseding indictment in the illegitimate Trump DOJ's illegitimate case against the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC), in which the incelmaxxers at DOJ are trying to "prove" that SPLC "defrauded" its donors by using paid informants to infiltrate white supremacist and other extremist groups. In other words, basically exactly what donors pay the SPLC to do. The dumbfuck argument, which they are counting on you to believe, is that the donors didn't want this, or that, barring that, they can convince a jury that instead of infiltrating Nazi groups, SPLC was, we dunno, taking Nazis to romantic dinners sincerely, because they secretly love Nazis.

Obviously, this is happening because the Trump DOJ is extremely angry that the SPLC essentially took out the Klan, and has continued to do that with so many extremist groups over the decades, extremist groups made up of white supremacists, Nazis, pedophiles, and rapists, or as some people call it, Trump's base.

It's also happening because in order for authoritarians to capture a nation, they have to make it impossible for the good guys to keep operating freely, by whatever means they can manage, and one of the authoritarian playbook's favorite ways of doing that is to bankrupt them with legal bills.

So, superseding indictment!

They have indicted Heidi Beirich, an extremism expert who ran the SPLC's intelligence project, on fraud and other charges, because ... uh, we'll just let the Washington Post explain it:

Federal prosecutors accused Heidi Beirich [...] of overseeing payments to informants working undercover in a variety of hate groups.

Well, somebody has to do that, we reckon, if you're going to have informants. Were they supposed to be volunteer informants?

Beirich, 59, of Palm Springs, California, was allegedly involved in a romantic relationship with one of those informants and diverted at least $140,000 to a joint bank account they shared and used to pay their personal living expenses, according to a superseding indictment unsealed in federal court in Montgomery, Alabama.

OK wait, so they're saying she fucked one of the informants and that she "diverted" the pay for the informant to their joint account, and ... wait what?

Was she not supposed to fuck the informant? Is Todd Blanche the arbiter of workplace romances now? And if they were fucking frequently enough that they had a joint account, wouldn't the money for "informant" that came into that account be known as "paycheck" for "job"? Did that money get "diverted" or did it get "direct deposited"?

Blanche and Assistant United States Attorney Kevin P. Davidson, who is prosecuting this case, gonna need to prove a crime here. Do they know they have to do that? Beirich's lawyer says it's bullshit:

A lawyer for Beirich denounced the charges — which include counts of wire fraud, money laundering conspiracy and conspiracy to provide false statements to banks — as an attempt by the Trump administration to "silence political opponents." He vowed she would fight the case.

"Violent extremists have not stopped or intimidated Dr. Beirich from her vital work during her time at the SPLC or in the six and a half years after she left the SPLC," defense lawyer

Michael Proctor said in a statement. “Dr. Beirich won’t be silenced or intimidated by the government’s false and politicized allegations now. She welcomes the opportunity to present the truth in court.”

Yeah, because either they accidentally stumbled upon something real here, or this is just part of the DOJ’s Nazi witch hunt against the people who expose the Nazis, which makes Trump Nazis very, very mad.

Hey, we bet we know which one!

WaPo explains some more about the indictment — it’s not on the docket yet, that we’ve seen — namely that it j’accuse!-s the SPLC of paying $4.1 million over 16 years (2007 to 2023) to eight or more informants who infiltrated the KKK and the National Socialist Movement, which is neo-Nazis.

In some cases, prosecutors said, the source of the money was disguised through accounts associated with fictitious businesses, which the organization has said was done to protect informants involved in highly dangerous work. [...]

“She was part of the effort to open bank accounts in completely fictitious companies’ names and make payments to individuals for reasons that were not accurate or described,” Blanche told reporters Wednesday.

Blanche and the DOJ dimwits who filed this shit would be shocked to learn how undercover copping works, or spying, or what it might be like not to be a bootlicking little bitch.

Allegedly, the informant Beirich was allegedly also being infiltrated by, in the romantic way — they lived together — got $1.2 million.

Although the court filing does not identify him, it says he infiltrated the National Alliance, a neo-Nazi group based in West Virginia, and had been on the SPLC’s payroll for 20 years.

Yep, still sounds like DOJ is complaining about a workplace romance, or that what they’re really mad about is that SPLC infiltrated a neo-Nazi group.

Did we mention that they dropped this on the nine-year anniversary of when one of Donald Trump’s “very fine people on both sides” in Charlottesville murdered Heather Heyer? It’s probably just a coincidence.
