Buried in Spam? There’s a Hidden Trick in Gmail to Make Your Inbox Less Chaotic.

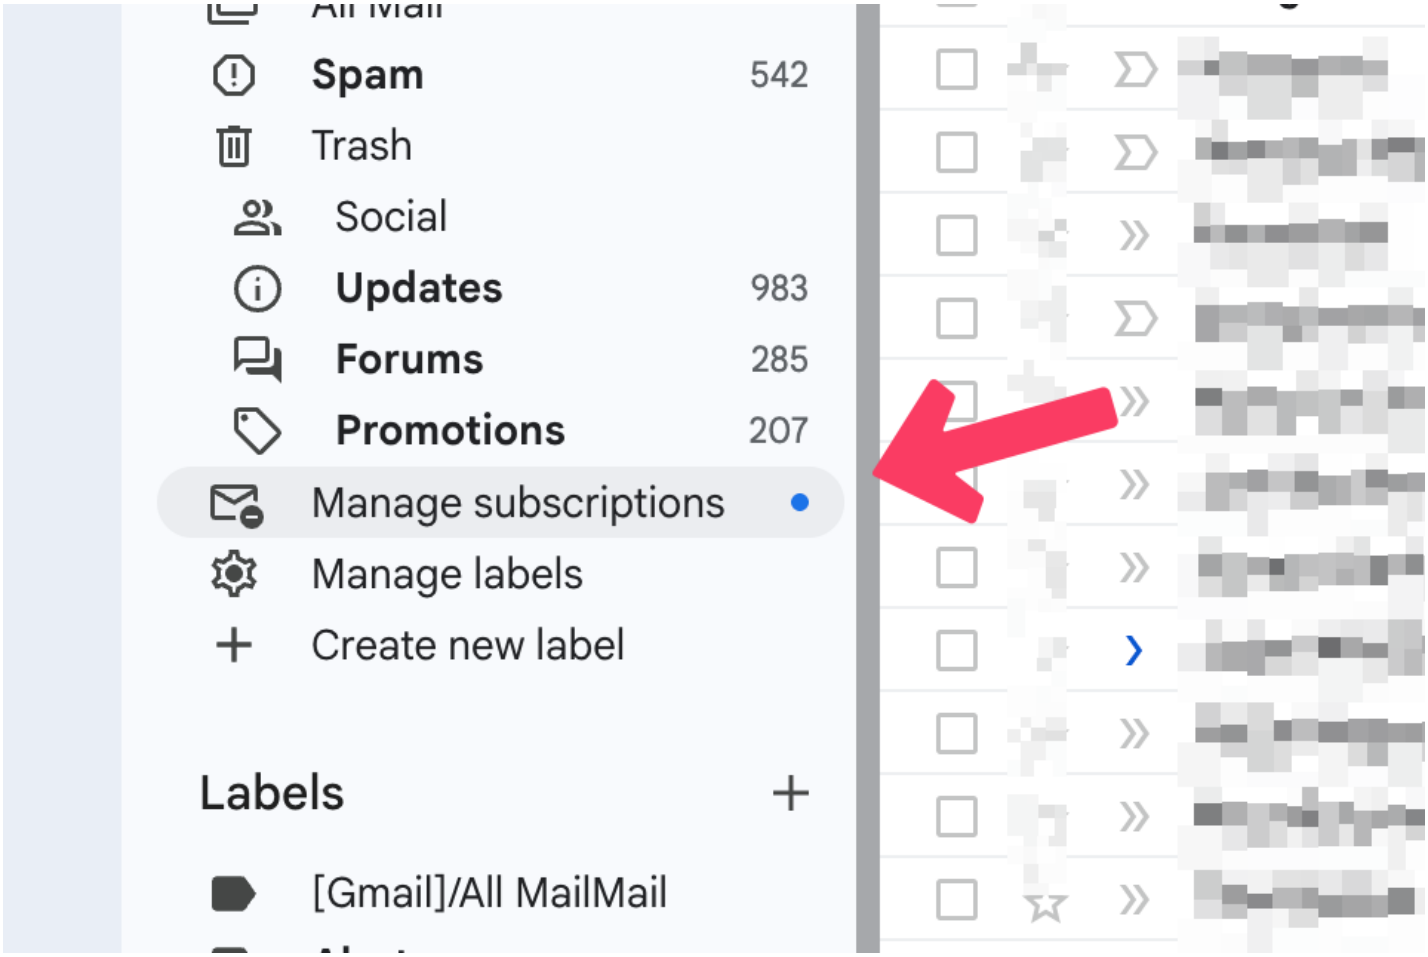

Published by
Shannon Palus
Estimated reading time
2 min
Added on 2026-11-04
Address
https://slate.com/technology/2026/11/email-unsubscribe-gmail-hack.html

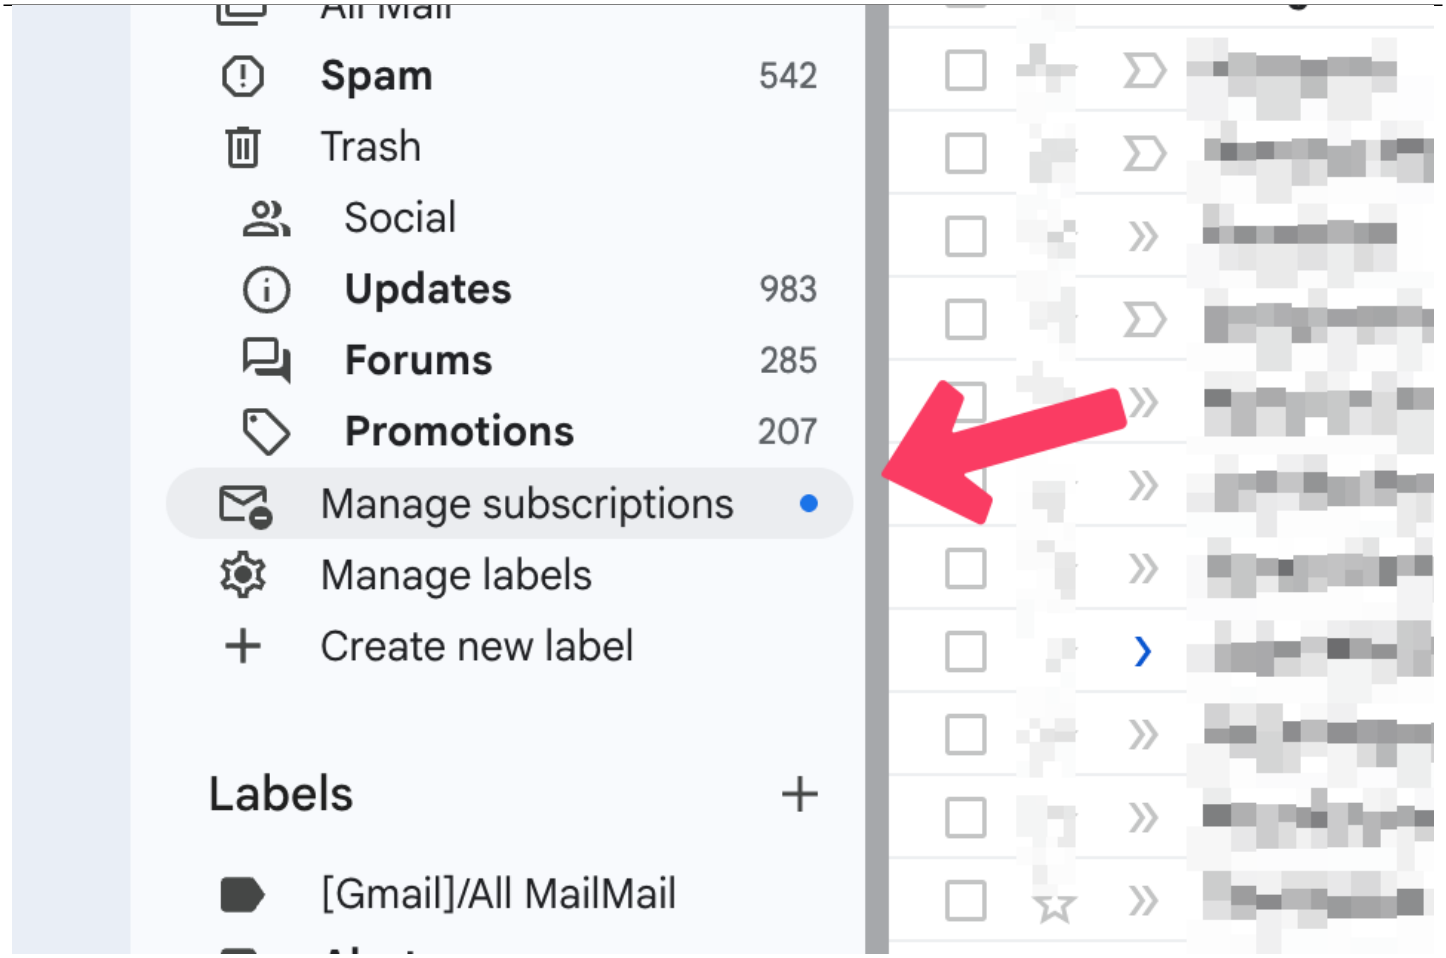

Buried in Spam? There’s a Hidden Trick in Gmail to Make Your Inbox Less Chaotic.

Sign up for the Slatest to get the most insightful analysis, criticism, and advice out there, delivered to your inbox daily.

This is One Thing, a column with tips on how to live.

The other day, Slate’s VP of technology, Greg Lavallee, dropped a tip into a Slate Slack discussion that immediately changed my life for the better. If you are one of the billion-plus people who use Gmail, there is an extremely easy way to unsubscribe from marketing emails:

Screenshot from Greg Lavallee

• Video from Slate

In a tab labeled “Manage subscriptions” in the left rail of the Gmail interface, there’s a list of all the promotional emails and newsletters that regularly make their way into your inbox. Next to each one is an unsubscribe button. Two clicks, and you’re done. (You can also easily see all the emails you’ve been sent recently by whatever hair-care company or politician, to jog your memory on whether you do actually get value out of them.)

Gmail quietly rolled out the feature in July of 2025. (Update, November 4th: Yes, as one commenter pointed out, it doesn’t work if you have Gmail’s AI “smart features” setting turned off). It’s funny how the dumbest tech innovations are the ones that make a splash; as of this writing, everyone is correctly up in arms at the admission of the former CEO of Yahoo that she sees value in asking artificial intelligence to surface bullet points on what makes her daughter special; this is a “service” that she is trying to monetize. And yet, what often makes life easier is less tech, not more. I dream of an inbox that contains only messages that I really need to see, for example, not one that keeps me tethered to every brand and political party I’ve ever come into brief contact with. (I bought one pair of beautiful, eccentric shoes over the summer, and now I am constantly at risk of spending hundreds of dollars more on such shoes, due to marketing emails, and for what?) This won’t solve our inbox woes wholesale, but it will, at least, offer an easier path to a little relief.

Get the best of news and politics

Sign up for Slate's evening newsletter.

Thanks for signing up! You can manage your newsletter subscriptions at any time.

You're already subscribed to the The Slatest newsletter. You can manage your newsletter subscriptions at any time.

We encountered an issue signing you up. Please try again, or manage all your newsletter subscriptions here .

Please enable javascript to sign up for newsletters.

Email address:

I consent to pixel tracking to improve this newsletter and the overall user experience.
By signing up, you agree to our Privacy Policy and Terms.

Sign Up

Produced by wallabag with tcpdf

Please open an issue if you have trouble with the display of this E-Book on your device.